We therefore confirmed that the sample size was sufficiently large for the statistical analysis. There are several limitations of the present study. First, this was a cross-sectional study performed in the hypertensive outpatient clinic at a single institution; therefore, caution is required when considering the generalizability of the results. Second, there was the selection bias associated with the refusal to participate. Finally, the present study was not a controlled study and is therefore subject to the potential effects of self-reported recall bias. Further studies are needed to confirm the findings of our study.

Conclusion {#Sec13} ===== In conclusion, we demonstrated that eGFR correlated with the plasma level of asymmetric dimethylarginine in a dose-dependent manner. It was also confirmed that the asymmetric dimethylarginine level was associated with the risk of hypertension and that the abnormal asymmetric dimethylarginine level contributes to the development of the metabolic syndrome and CKD in hypertensive patients.
