She was arrested for taking part in a protest against the former Prime Minister. This is the same lady who's now being accused of the murder of the Pakistani journalist. She's free today because her family was well-known here in the country. But next time she may be thrown into jail." In November 2016, Azmi was one of about 150 religious clerics who signed a declaration in support of Pakistan's blasphemy laws. This declaration, which the BBC has been unable to verify, was signed and distributed by the Jamiat Ulema-e-Islam, a group of Islamic scholars. The declaration states that it is obligatory for Muslims to support the blasphemy law. Azmi says he signed the declaration because he believed that blasphemy laws were essential to safeguarding Islam. But he also believes that those who took part in the declaration have been subjected to a witch-hunt, and fear for their lives. In the
